Excerpt from The Highlands and Western Isles of Scotland, Containing Descriptions of Their Scenery and Antiquities, Vol. 3 of 4: With an Account of the Political History and Present Condition On Briska, there is a tower which has been a strong hold Of the Mac Niels though small, it is striking, from the scarcity of objects Of art in this doleful country. We entered into conversation with some Old people, who attempted to amuse us with tales, probably more interesting to them than to us. The ship that brought Prince Charles from France, first anchored in this bar bour; and it was remembered with some feelings of hereditary pride, that he had landed on Briska, where he found some women roasting shell-fish on a fire in the Open air, and that he had partaken of their fare; thus com mencing the career of that popularity which, as it con tinued to the end, must have been as much the result Of good-nature as Of policy. The Opinion Of a few old women in this wild place, could have been Of as little...
