I: Birth of the Sojourner is a poetic work composed partly in the form and spirit of the English neo-classical tradition, partly in the Romantic tradition, employing as its three principal characters the voice of the Sojourner caught in a conflict between the Demonic and Sacred voices in the Heart. The alternation of these voices moves the work swiftly along with contrast, comparison and an attempt at reconciliation. It is not merely a drama observed from a distance, but sets the reader upon a trial of reflection and a practical Odyssey of their own, promising fine, aesthetic appreciation and communion with the issues of modern civilization. With a sense for what has gone terribly wrong, the Sojourner agonizes over the temptations of the Demonic voice while striving to live at peace with the Sacred voice, contemplating the systems of the world, the brutality of injustice, and the pain involved in losing one's innocence. The Birth of the Sojourner concerns a struggle to reconcile what seems a fantasy vision of the moral universe with the realities of human nature, of life, and the powerful forces of political and intellectual corruption in the world. It is a contrast of the real laws at work set against the ideal laws at work in the heart and can be understood as the contention of inhumane values with humane values and the agony that this conflict involves for the Sojourner. As such, the work asks the question: What would the vision of a humane world look like, as set against the present world as constituted? Ultimately, the Sojourner arrives at a perception that the corrupting forces...
